

WOMEN JURORS INSPIRE LAWYERS

Cigars and Cigarettes, Likewise
"Rough-housing" Are Eliminated at Galesburg.

SERVE DAY-ON $6.04 SUIT

Members Complimented by Attorneys
After Deciding Laundry Dispute.

Galesburg, Ill., Jan. 21.—The first woman jury ever called here served all day in a laundry case involving $6.04, and it was not until last evening that a verdict was returned for the defendant. The case was that of the Galesburg Steam Laundry against Sam Konas, and there was an array of attorneys on each side. The first six women called were accepted by both sides without question and Miss Pauline Marsh was made foreman. The laundry firm claimed Konas had missed some payments, while the defense was that through the negligence of the delivery boy the Greek had missed laundry of more value than the claim. A decidedly changed atmosphere prevailed in the justice court. Cigars and cigarettes were put away and there was no "rough housing" by lawyers. The attorneys tried by their gallantry to win the jury. After the verdict was rendered the attorneys highly complimented the women.

Bishop M. E. Fawcett Honored.
Quincy, Ill., Jan. 21.—The consecration of Rt. Rev. M. Edward Fawcett, D. D., to the episcopate of the diocese of Quincy took place at St. Bartholomew's Episcopal church, Englewood, Chicago, of which he was then rector, 10 years ago yesterday. The anniversary was observed by deliberations of the holy communion in all the parishes of this diocese yesterday. The bishop received hundreds of letters of congratulations from the clergy and laity of the diocese and a purse of gold from the people of the diocese was presented him at his home yesterday morning. The anniversary was observed in the bishop's former parish of St. Bartholomew, Chicago, with a celebration of the holy communion in the morning, conducted by Rev. H. W. Schniewind, the present rector.

For New University Library.
Urbana, Ill., Jan. 21.—Overwhelmed by the demands of more than 4,000 students, though it was erected with space for only 500, the library of the University of Illinois will be replaced by a new building, according to an announcement made yesterday. The present building was erected during the term of Governor John P. Altgeld. It will probably be used by the college of law.

Special Elections Called.
Springfield, Ill., Jan. 21.—Governor Dunne yesterday issued a call for the special elections, primary and general, which will be held in the seventh judicial court of the state to elect a successor to Judge Owen P. Thompson, whom the governor named as a state utilities commissioner. The primary will be held March 24 and the election April 28.

Assaults Prisoners Shot Him.
Danville, Ill., Jan. 21.—Constable Joseph Rice of St. Joseph, who was badly wounded by one of three yeggmen he attempted to arrest near Glover last August last night identified two of three men held in jail here since New Year's on a charge of safe-blowing as members of the party that shot him.

AT THE ILLINOIS.
"The Light Eternal," played at the Illinois last evening, is a condensation of one of the many stories woven of the material surrounding the lives of the early Christians and of their harrowing sufferings which were made a feature of the pleasures of pagan Rome of that period. The religious atmosphere is couched in splendid diction and the lines were repeated with sense of the beauty of language by a capable company. John Milton was given close margin by Alfred Myle in delineative grasp of the characters of Marco and Cleonius, suitors of the regenerated Artemia; and the work of Austa Pierce was good. Louise Dunbar gave a strong portrayal of the conflicting passions of the Princess Artemia, whose hate of the Christians is turned to that of faith by the strength of her love for Marco. In historical value plays like "The Light Eternal" are really worth while, and furnish food for thought to those who care to share in minute understanding of the martyrdom connected with the roots of Christianity.

Next Friday at the Illinois theatre-goers will have an opportunity of seeing that much discussed drama of sex, "The Natural Law," by Charles Sumner. It is close to the life and people about us, and puts forth a practically new stage creation—the ideal physician's feeling in regard to the Hippocratic oath, an oath that all physicians must take before obtaining a license to practice medicine. It will be inferred that "The Natural Law" is a plain-spoken play. It is, and yet is without offense. It is claimed, because it is depicted for a clear moral purpose. It is a bold dramatic attempt to rehabilitate the "ruined girl," to shatter the cherished traditions of the drama. While that is the underlying theme, there is the related question of a physician's duty to abide by his oath of Hippocrates, no matter how strong the appeal of his sympathies and even to his love for the victim of a momentary yielding to the natural law of sex attraction. The girl appeals to the physician, whom she has jilted. Gently but firmly he explains his Hippocratic oath, and points out that the only right way is through immediate marriage to the athlete, for whom, now that the fever has passed, she has no real affection. He attempts to arrange this marriage at once, only to be balked by the lack of a license.

A hit by a novelist is followed almost invariably by conversion of the story into a play. Witness the great number of "best sellers" which have found their way to the stage. Some have come forth as very bad plays, some just "got by," while others were quite agreeable. Many of them were and are great money makers. "Dramatic rights reserved," is a line the budding author takes care is conspicuously shown in his book. "Lavender and Old Lace," a notable success in the field of American story writing, has been an exception to the rule of hurrying a popular novel to the stage. It was written more than ten years ago and has had 40 printings, but not until this season has it appeared in play form. The reason is probably not hard to find. The lyrical note in Myrtle Reed's books, their delicacy of sentiment and exquisite refinement, entrance her thousands of readers, but give the playwright despair. Despair at any rate to the dramatist who would give to the stage a Myrtle Reed story in all its airy freshness, clarity and optimism, who would in other words, do the memory of this gifted woman justice. David G. Fischer, who dramatized "Lavender and Old Lace," worked on it for months. He has preserved all the characters in the play. Mary Almslie, Jane Hathaway, Carl and Ruth, Hespsey, Joe and Captain Ball, all appear in the flesh, to the delight of those who hung upon every word of the original story. The new book-play will be seen at the Illinois theatre next Saturday, Jan. 24, under the direction of the United Play Co. (Inc.) with Sarah Padden and a cast of unusual excellence.

Fiske O'Hara, with his superb tenor voice and engaging personality, will be the central figure of the splendid company that is booked to present Augustus Pittou's latest play, "In Old Dublin," at the Illinois next Sunday. The big tenor with his handsome face and stalwart figure, makes an ideal hero in the comedy romance which the veteran author has written for him and it is said that never before has he been so happily fitted with a play. The character of Neil Powers, the young boat designer, fits him like a glove and his excellent training, gained in stock dramatic productions, serves him in good stead when the dainty love scenes with the charming Rose Stratton are portrayed. "In Old Dublin" is a tensely interesting play throughout. The picturesque life of the Irish aristocracy and peasantry is depicted with the utmost fidelity and the rare wit that has made the Celt so famous, scintillates in every scene of it. Mr. O'Hara has a new budget of catching melodies which he sings with his usual magnetic style.

AT THE BURTIS.
It happens often that when a book has been dramatized, its presentation on the stage causes the audience to look with interest at the name of the author and inquire, "What else has he written?" and there follows a wild demand for his books that makes his popularity like a contagion. This will not be the case with "The Garden of Allah." "Who," the audience will ask, "is the great genius that saw the possibilities for such an amazing spectacular production in such a book? Who read this book and saw between the lines the opportunity for producing the greatest scenic play the stage has ever known?" "The Garden of Allah," as a book is the foundation on which has been built a play that every one should see, and when they see it they will go away marveling at the wonderful edifice some architect of the spectacular has erected. It is a series of marvelous visions, the like of which has never been produced on any stage. Robert Hichens undoubtedly recognizes the superiority of the scene to the story, for the drama throughout is made subservient to the tales the pictures tell: the great brooding mystery of the desert; the wonderful spell it casts over all who, once beholding it, can never leave it; the secret of its silence and the longing hope of the world-weary that somewhere out in its vast solitudes will be found eternal peace, make their appeals through the genius of the man who devised the scenes. The promise of the desert at sunrise, the fury of the sand-storm, and the calm brooding peace at moonlight, will be remembered. The play will be offered at the Burtis, Davenport, all next week.
